

Australia

- With the large deserts that occupy central Australia (about $\frac{1}{3}$ of the whole country), about 85%-90% of the population lives on the coast due to its milder climate.
- About 80% of the animals that live in Australia are unique to this country. You won't find their natural habitats being anywhere else in the world.
- Australia is the smallest continent in the world but also one of the largest countries in the world.
- Even though Australia has been known as "the Oldest Continent" or "the Last Frontier", the age of the cores of all the continents on earth are approximately the same.

Brazil

- Brazil takes up half of South America's landmass, making it the fifth largest country while also being the fifth most populous country in the world.
- Brazil shares a border with every country in South America except Ecuador and Chile.
- The majority of the Amazon River basin is in Brazil.

Canada

- Canada is the second largest country in the world (Russia being the largest) and takes up two fifths of the North American continent. Even with its large size it is one of the most sparsely populated countries in the world.
- Canada's official languages are French and English.
- The Border that Canada shares with the United States is 5,525 miles long (including Alaska). This is also the longest border in the world that is not patrolled by military forces.

China

- China is the largest Asian country and has the largest population in the world ($\frac{1}{2}$ of all humans in the world live in China).
- Under China's central government there are 33 administrative units directly under it consisting of 22 provinces, 5 autonomous regions, 4 municipalities, and 2 special administrative regions.
- China is one of the few existing countries in the world that have flourished economically and culturally in its early stages. Little to no outside influences had a large impact on China's cultural development (with the expansion of Buddhism coming from India).

Croatia

- Present day Croatia comprises the historically Croatian regions of Croatia-Slavonia, Istria, and Dalmatia.
- Croatia's culture is mostly Western-oriented despite the country having been under various foreign rule for centuries.
- Croatia's European trajectory was recognized when the country joined the European Union in 2013.
